Notes from our January 10th meeting

After happy hour, dinner and introduction of guests, Meteorologist Ted Buehner who works with our own Tim Hunter at KRKO in Everett, was our speaker for the evening. Ted was a National Weather Service meteorologist for 40 years, the last 23 years as Warning Coordination Meteorologist and the key liaison with partners and customers of aviation and marine weather. He has also been a baseball umpire, and works at the Everett radio stations. He has had some fun times working with the guys from the "Deadliest Catch" and volunteers a lot, most recently with the Special Olympics which was held in Seattle last summer.

Ted talked to us about the many different types of weather hazards we have in Washington, the ones with the most impact being avalanches, excessive heat, and fog. Ted also works with the public warning system and the preparedness committee. There were a lot of questions asked from the audience which led to discussion about global warming, earthquakes, floods and tidal waves and tornadoes. If you have weather or alert and warning questions that we did not have time to address, please contact Ted at tornadot-ed@comcast.net.

Minutes were approved. (Minutes submitted by Debbi Larson of Skagit Bank)
